SSG Naomi Graham did not participate much in sports while growing up. She started boxing after high school, a year before enlisting in the Army. Her sister introduced her to the sport of boxing. In 2012, Graham began a self-training regimen that resulted in her first three wins. The Army has provided her with expert coaching, elite facilities, and the opportunity to compete throughout the nation and the world.

"Being a Soldier-athlete means everything to me. On both side I get to show people what a leader looks like and mentor those who look up to me. I feel I have knowledge to share that can help someone in the future."
